Columbia, SC: For kids who receive school meals, the summer months can be the hungriest time of year. No Kid Hungry South Carolina provided 17 organizations across the state with a total of $245,305 to help reach more kids in rural communities with summer meals.

Traditional summer meal programs have only reached a fraction of kids in rural communities, but non-congregate summer meal flexibilities have been a game changer in recent years. No Kid Hungry's grant funding supports summer meal programs that make meals more accessible for rural families by delivering meals to children who need them or allowing parents to pick meals up at a central location to be taken home for their kids, oftentimes for multiple days at a time.

The following school districts and community organizations received summer meal grants from No Kid Hungry South Carolina:

- Abbeville County School District
- Charleston County School District
- Greenwood School District 50
- Performing Arts and Sciences Academy
- School District of Pickens County
- Spartanburg School District 4
- Thornwell Charter School
- Family YMCA of Greater Augusta
- Sheep Gate Ministries, Inc.

- Community Assistance Mentoring Program
- KT Destiny Center, Inc.
- Partners for Change of the Carolinas
- Serenity Charity Club, Inc.
- Union County School District
- Upstate Circle of Friends
- The SMART Box
- The Lowcountry Food Bank

For many children, during the school year, free and reduced price school meals ensure reliable access to nutrition. When schools close for the summer, however, these meals disappear and families struggle from the strain on already-tight budgets. This can be particularly true for rural families. A recent No Kid Hungry nationwide survey found that nearly three quarters (74%) of rural families living on low incomes with children ran out of food in the past year.

“Summer meals are a lifeline for kids and families who rely on school meals throughout the school year,” said Marissa Spady, No Kid Hungry South Carolina senior program manager. “We’re excited to support the programs that are making dependable nutrition accessible to families in all corners of the state, reaching many more kids with the food they need to stay healthy over the summer and start the next school year ready to learn.”
